CIRQUE DREAMS: HOLIDAZE LIGHTS UP

THE HULT By Rachael Carnes

What combines dancing penguins, tightrope-walking snowmen, gravity-defying aerial feats, illusion, acrobatics and some good old-fashioned song and dance? The answer is Cirque Dreams: Holidayze, featuring 20 such dizzying acts and lighting up the Hult Center stage Nov. 22 and 23.

From cruise ships to concert halls, an estimated 50 million people worldwide have attended a Cirque Dreams production. "My goal is to show audiences something they've never seen before," says veteran director-producer Neil Goldberg, founder of the Cirque Dreams juggernaut (not to be confused with the French-Canadian Cirque du Soleil, which is unrelated).

In order to find and recruit talent to his stable of performers, Goldberg has developed relationships with the Mongolian School of Contortion, the Beijing Acrobatic Association, the Cultural Division of the Ethiopian Government and the American Federation of Jump Rope Associations.

"Our casting department looks through 50 submissions per week," Goldberg says. If selected, performers train for up to a year at Goldberg's Dream Theater in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, before ever appearing onstage.

Behind the scenes, any traveling show has to conform to the space it enters, but when the lives of dancers and aerialists are on the line, the intricacies of continually changing venues become a challenge to designers and builders.

"No two theaters in the world are exactly alike, so the set for Holidayze is built a bit like an erector set," says Goldberg. "It's possible for it to continually expand and contract to adapt to new theater spaces."

If you're looking for a holiday diversion for all ages, then Holidayze, with its glittery, short-attention-span razzmatazz, may fit the bill.

"It's challenging to find something that the whole family can walk out of, having had a good experience," Goldberg says. "But this show brings a smile to everyone's face." ♦

Cirque Dreams: Holidayze runs Nov. 22-23 at the Hult Center; $30-$73, tickets at 682-5000 or hultcenter.org.

Making Memories in the Kitchen

FAMILIES SHARE TRADITIONAL HOLIDAY FOODS By Rachael Carnes

Whether it's tamales, suet pudding or even lutefisk, many Eugene families keep memories alive by preparing their favorite holiday foods.

"We eat mushroom soup every Christmas Eve, in keeping with the Polish tradition of my husband's family," says Leigh Christiansen, who co-owns Eugene-based Calypso Fly Fishing Guide Service with her husband, Barrett Christiansen. "We gather chanterelles in the fall, and dry sauté and freeze them for our soup. This ritual is very dear to us."

Many holiday foods originate in religious traditions, elevating simple ingredients to symbolic levels.

"Hanukkah isn't Hanukkah without latkes," says Karen Luks, who works at the UO's Prevention Science Institute. Latkes are made from potatoes, onion and ground matzah meal. Attorney and mom of two Julie Manela adds, "I associate latkes with sour cream and applesauce with the holiday — my mom trying to keep up with frying enough of them, and the smell of frying potatoes."

For Briana Parra, a full-time UO student who holds down three jobs while raising a teenage daughter, the holidays mean seafood. "We do a shrimp and oyster fry every Christmas Eve," Parra says. "We invite our friends and neighbors. It's a tradition that goes back to my great-grandparents."

Then there are the sweets, a seemingly endless collection of delectable morsels made from flour, butter, eggs and sugar. For Greg Schofield, who sells and dispatches rock out of Knife River's Springfield quarry, the holidays are all about stollen, German yeasted bread studded with candied fruit and nuts. "Sliced and toasted and slathered with butter, it's very yummy," Schofield says.

For lots of folks, it just doesn't feel festive without the flavors their families have enjoyed for years.

"We've made nut tossies for generations, and my Grammy always used to make kiffles," says Kristy Munro, who owns and operates the GlassRoots Glass Shop. Hungarian pastries, kiffles and tossies are like tiny pecan pies. "Both are eaten faster than I can make them," Munro says.

Food connects us to the past. The tastes and smells remind us of sharing time in our kitchens and around our tables with loved ones and friends.

"My mom's parents came from Naples in the early 1900s, and brought this delicious cookie recipe with them," says Lisa Christon, author and director of local non-profit Josephine's Closet. Each year, Christon's family churns out hundreds of tasty mostaccioli, or Italian chocolate spice cookies.

"My mom passed away a few years ago," Christon says, "and making this cookie makes me remember all the happy memories of making them with her." ♦

EUGENE BALLET COMPANY

Magic and Mayhem

TALES OF MISADVENTURES WITH EUGENE BALLET COMPANY'S
THE NUTCRACKER By Rachael Carnes

The Eugene Ballet Company has steadfastly delivered heartwarming performances of The Nutcracker in every one of its 35 seasons. Usually things go off without a hitch, though over the years there have been a few mishaps.

"This is live performance," says Toni Pimble, artistic director for EBC. "And the unexpected is always upon us."

One year, the giantess Mother Ginger had been outfitted with a new rolling cage underneath her crinolines, rendering the dancer vulnerable to gravity — especially when she began to engage in what Pimble calls "overly enthusiastic arm flapping."

Fortunately, Mother Ginger's charges, tiny girls dressed as candy, had already come out from under her skirt when she began to wobble, and were cheerily dancing in a circle when Mother Ginger toppled over. "Remarkably, the little bonbons didn't miss a step," Pimble says.

Then there was the time that the Mouse King became woefully disoriented. "The mouse masks are not easy to work in; they reduce your peripheral vision," Pimble says.

"The Mouse King got turned around and started backing up, and then he just fell into the orchestra pit," Pimble says. "He was knocked out cold."

In Nutcracker performances, the Mouse King is traditionally carried away on a stretcher to the wails of his mouse followers.

Here, life imitated art, as EMTs wheeled the Mouse King offstage. "He waved to the audience," Pimble says, "but I think it's just because he was in shock."

Audiences may be too lulled by the magical story to appreciate the perils of puppet and mask work or the rigors of its choreography, but the piece demands a lot from its dancers. "The grand pas de deux, with the Sugar Plum Fairy and the Cavalier, are technically challenging and require a great deal of stamina," Pimble says.

Likewise, "The Polichinelles-Harlequin is a difficult piece, with petit allegro, or fast footwork," Pimble says. "And the 'Russian Dance,' it's like the 4-minute mile. They go out and they go full blast."

But, she adds, "there are a lot of parts, like the 'Waltz of the Flowers,' that can focus on technique."

Whether it's your first viewing or your 35th, Pimble suggests that the ballet has staying power because of its indelible story, and also "because the Tchaikovsky score is beautifully written."

This year, performances will feature live music with Orchestra NEXT.

"We have families who come year after year," Pimble says. "The tradition holds very strong." ♦

The Nutcracker runs Dec. 19-21 at the Hult Center; $28-43, tickets at 682-5000 or hult-center.org.

Sounds of the Season

A SLEIGHFUL OF TRADITIONAL (AND NOT SO TRADITIONAL)

OPTIONS FOR HOLIDAY MUSIC By Brett Campbell

There are plenty of traditional holiday sounds available this month, but happily, Eugene music organizations are also providing worthwhile alternatives when the wassail grows stale.

The seasonal fare starts with the ever-popular University of Oregon holiday choral and gospel concerts Dec. 6-7 at Beall Concert Hall, featuring youthfully exuberant energy and traditional faves.

The biggest holiday extravaganza happens Dec. 7 at the Hult Center's Silva Hall, when the Eugene Concert Choir, Oregon Mozart Players and Eugene Vocal Arts Ensemble team up with guests Mason "Classical Gas" Williams, Shedd regular Bill Hulings, Darline Jackson, South Eugene H.S. Concert Choir, Oregon Tuba Ensemble and a cappella singers Evynne and Peter Hollens, Rezonate and Synergy. Be prepared to carol along.

For sounds on a smaller scale, Chamber Music Amici's Dec. 8 performance at Springfield's Wildish Community Theater features some of the city's top musicians in a Mozart Piano Quartet and Boccherini's famous "fandango" guitar quintet, featuring the excellent Portland guitarist Scott Kritzer and those clacky castanets.

Explore nontraditional holiday music at The Shedd on Dec. 8, when José Hernández and Sol De México celebrate Mexico's Christmas with seasonal mariachi music from Veracruz, Yucatan and Jalisco, and on Dec. 11 and 14 with the Emerald City Jazz Kings Christmas show.

One of my favorite traditions, Oregon Mozart Players' Candlelight Baroque concert on Dec. 19-20, features music by J.S. Bach (a Brandenburg concerto and an orchestral suite), his brilliant son Carl Philip Emanuel and Vivaldi.

Finally, let's hope Eugene Opera's New Year's Eve celebration becomes a tradition — and not just here: It's such a treat to celebrate music instead of going out, getting hammered and endangering others on the road. Instead, make a special night of it by checking out Donizetti's bubbly comedy, The Elixir of Love. There's also a matinee performance Jan. 4, giving you time to recuperate from the hangover if you took the former alternative instead. ♦

Holiday Drama

FAMILY-FRIENDLY THEATER TO BEAT THE WINTER BLUES By Anna Grace

Wanna catch a show? Holiday theater abounds in our suddenly festive town. This year local theaters are offering fun, family-friendly shows that aren't necessarily Christmas-focused. Your options are as follows:

SHE LOVES ME

Cottage Theatre is producing this sweet musical. She Loves Me is taken from the same story as the 1993 classic, Sleepless in Seattle. Fun music and dancing accompany the tale of corresponding sweethearts. The Cottage Theatre builds on a string of strong musicals, making this play a good bet. Dec. 5-21.

ANNIE

Michael P. Watkins directs this classic at Actors Cabaret of Eugene. It's guaranteed to be chockfull of cute kids and good humor. No one minds if you sing along, and dinner with dessert at intermission makes this a popular family outing. Nov. 21-Dec. 20.

BABES IN ARMS

Babes in Arms is a fun, 1930s Rodgers & Hart musical about a group of kids trying to get out of a summer on the work farm by putting on a show. "It's a pleasure to listen to and work on the music of Rodgers and Hart," says the show's director Peg Major. "Some of the most memorable of their songs are in this show. I think everyone will recognize a lot of the music." This Shedd production boasts a full orchestra, with musical direction by Robert Ashens. Major says, "I've been very inspired by watching Maestro Robert Ashens work his magic. He is a fountain of knowledge and is so wonderfully gifted as a vocal and orchestral director." Dec. 5-21.

AN AMERICAN CHRISTMAS CAROL

Ballet Fantastique is taking Charles Dickens' tale and setting it in a stylized, post-WWII America. To set the mood, Eugene's own Halie Loren, an internationally recognized jazz singer, will perform new arrangements of standards by Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald and Nat King Cole. This mash-up of jazz, ballet and classic literature sounds like a fascinating dramatic experiment. Hult Center, Dec. 12-19.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

Oregon Contemporary Theatre presents the world premiere of Elizabeth Helman's new adaptation of Charles Dickens' classic. OCT is hoping to usher families through their doors with this production. According to artistic director Craig Willis, "We want to make sure that each year we're including programming that is family friendly, so that we reach new patrons and so that our current patrons have opportunities to introduce their kids and/or grandkids to the magic of live theatre. Also, it really is a fun story to tell and it's great having three generations of performers on the stage telling this story." Dec. 5-20.

These shows are just what's new this year. If you are really sold on tradition, it's hard to beat Radio Redux's It's a Wonderful Life, Rose Children's Theatre's Glee Xmas Review and, of course, the Eugene Ballet Company will present The Nutcracker. ♦
